Corn Dust Research Consortium-The CDRC is a collaboration of a dozen organizations managed by the Pollinator Partnership that includes beekeepers, corn growers, seed and pesticide producers, equipment manufacturers, and regulatory agencies from the US and Canada. The purpose of the CDRC is to fund and monitor practical research projects designed to understand, and ultimately reduce or eliminate the impacts of the exposure of honey bees to pesticides during corn planting with treated seed. The group has raised and distributed grants through the Pollinator Partnership to four different research institutions in corn growing states and provinces. The research goal is to create best management practices that will positively influence the health of honey bees. This unique collaborative approach is an industry first and creates a transparent and credible authority for science-based information.
